

Acknowledgements

We would first like to acknowledge the Traditional Owners of Australia, their knowledge and continuing connection to the land, sea and waters of Australia. We pay our deep respects to Elders past and present.

This book represents a collaboration involving many researchers, government agencies and conservation NGOs, reflective of the extraordinary number and diversity of those who responded to the Australian wildfires of 2019–20. Nearly 200 people from more than 70 government agencies, universities, conservation non-government organisations, Indigenous organisations and other groups co-authored chapters, and this book is the better for the many perspectives thus offered. We thank all of these contributors for their wisdom, words, friendship and commitment.

The book was inspired by the concerns shown by so many Australians about the impacts that these wildfires had on our nature, and the extraordinary responses made by so many organisations and individuals to help recover species, environments and landscapes. In this book, we wanted to celebrate, pay tribute to and document that spirit, and to provide a resource that would help our community prepare better for next time.

A substantial part of this book springs from research conducted in the aftermath of the wildfires by the National Environmental Science Program's Threatened Species Recovery Hub, supported by the Australian Government. All book editors were affiliated with this program, however, we note that the contributors to this book had many other affiliations. Within the Threatened Species Recovery Hub, we acknowledge particularly Heather Christensen, Chris Fenwick, Rachel Morgain and Jaana Dielenberg for their expertise and ready guidance.

Part of our involvement in the 2019–20 wildfires stemmed from membership (LR, SL, SvL and JW) of the Wildlife and Threatened Species Bushfire Recovery Expert Panel, established by the Australian Minister for the Environment, while the fires were still burning; and we acknowledge the Chair of that panel, the then Threatened Species Commissioner Dr Sally Box, for helping to coordinate such an extraordinary response.

For their reviews of chapter drafts we thank the generosity and expert guidance of Michael Braby, Elinor Breman, Allan Burbidge, Gareth Catt, Melissa Danks, Kelly de Bie, Chris Dickman, Tim Doherty, Megan Good, Conrad Hoskins, Lindy Lumsden, Dan Lunney, Michael Mahony, Kristina Macdonald, Peter Mawson, Anna Richards, Kevin Tolhurst, Rob Whelan, Dick Williams and Mike Wouters. We thank also the many people who willingly contributed photographs to this book.

From CSIRO Publishing, we thank Briana Melideo, Mark Hamilton and Tracey Kudis for their expert guidance and care, and we thank Joy Window for copy editing.

Finally, we would like to dedicate this book to our children, and their future.
